

COMPARATIVE LITERARY STUDIES

Degree Types: PhD

Graduates of Comparative Literary Studies leave with the historical knowledge, linguistic skills, and interpretive methodologies necessary to undertake scholarly research on and to teach literature in at least two languages.

The graduate faculty (drawn from all of Weinberg College's literature departments, as well as the Department of Art History and the School of Communication's Department of Radio/Television/Film, offer courses and mentoring in a wide range of literary fields and linguistic areas, including African, East and South Asian, Middle Eastern, and Latin American as well as European and English-language literatures. The program's methodological areas of strength include classical traditions, critical theory, modernism, poetry and poetics, visual culture and media, and the environmental humanities.

In addition to their studies within the program, students also take coursework in their "home departments," which provides training comparable to that of a PhD in a national literary field, qualifying graduates to work in national language and literature departments. Students' teaching and research assistantship opportunities are coordinated with their specific goals. Current home departments can be found on the Comparative Literary Studies Graduate page (<https://www.complit.northwestern.edu/graduate/>).

Many of our students participate in TGS's Interdisciplinary Cluster Initiative program, which provides an additional interdisciplinary intellectual "home."
